INTRODUCTION

This bibliography is by no means comprehensive or exhaustive. As the title indicates it is a "working bibliography" and is designed primarily as a work that will lead researchers to additional sources on the history and culture of Blacks in the American West. Moreover, it would be impossible to do a state by state study of Blacks in all the Western States. Therefore, I also included a number of non-western states in this work because it was through those states that Blacks settled before many decided to migrate west. Hence, it was my purpose to list the State Libraries, Archives, and Historical Societies, in order that each State could be contacted and supply the researcher with information on Blacks in their respective states.

The History of the Black man in the West has been shamefully ignored in American textbooks and it is the hope of this writer that more serious researchers and scholars will reexamine the role and impact that Blacks had on helping to open up the Western frontier. It can easily be proven from the sources cited in this work that of the 40,000 cowboys who rode the range, approximately 5,000 were Black. This fact takes on new dimensions when one realizes that during the heyday of the west-one out of every eight cowboys was Black, but only one man in ten in the population as a whole. Therefore, Blacks were more heavily represented in the saddle than their proportion in the population.

The two standard works on Blacks in the West are: William Loren Katz's The Black West, and Philip Durham and Everett L. Jones' The Negro Cowboys. There are, however, other works that deal with Blacks in the Army in the West: William H. Leckie, The Buffalo Soldiers: A Narrative of the Negro Cavalry in the West, 1869-1891; John H. Carroll, editor, The Black Military Experience in the American West;

Henry O. Flipper, The Colored Cadet at West Point; and Dudley Taylor Cornish, The Sable Arm. There are also a number of articles in The Journal of Negro History and The Negro History Bulletin on Blacks in the Southwest, Mid-West, West, Northwest, and Pacific Northwest.

I am deeply indebted to the many state libraries and their staffs for their assistance in supplying me with information on Blacks in their state. I would also like to thank the Portland State University History Department, the Northwest Institute of African and Black American Studies, the secretaries and college-work-study students of those two departments. I take full responsibilities, however, for all errors or omissions and welcome any corrections or additions.

B. GENERAL WORKS

Even though these books do not deal with Blacks in the West specifically, most of them have a number of pages that refer to Blacks. Moreover, since many Western States do not have histories of Blacks, these books serve a useful purpose.
